1. Jail Bed Contingency Funding (McKeel)	The Board will place $707,449 in contingency to fund additional jail beds, only to be released upon authorization of the Board as a means to prepare for an unanticipated need. In addition, this budget note requests a report to the Board on the status of efforts to institute alternative programs to jail, and the effect those program have had to date in reducing jail bed need in the Multnomah County system. The report should: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) Include trends of average daily numbers compared year-over-year, 2) Highlight the impact such alternative programs make, 3) Discuss weakness or failures of the initiatives, 4) Report on how a reduction from 1,310 to 1,192 beds would be conducted, and 5) Discuss the benefits and losses from allocating funds to maintain current jail beds or to reduce jail beds for the remainder of the fiscal year.

3. Relative Rate Index Report (Shiprack)	As part of the MacArthur Foundation's Safety and Justice Challenge work, participating sites were asked to work with an independent firm, the Institute of State and Local Governance (ISLG), to gather data about the population of individuals in the public safety system specific to race and ethnicity. Multnomah County complied and created a Relative Rate Index Report. A Relative Rate Index (RRI) provided a comparison of each racial and ethnic group to a reference group. To calculate the RRI, a rate is calculated for each racial/ethnic group, compared to whites, at a particular point in the system. At each point in Multnomah County's public safety system, from initial contact (e.g. arrest) through case prosecution, sentencing and supervision,

	the data indicated a significant disparity in the experience of adults of color versus white adults, particularly in the black population. For example, African Americans are six times more likely than Caucasians to have justice system involvement. The RRI report facilitated conversations among Multnomah County leadership about how to reduce racial and ethnic disparities across the system. It also provided a context to begin to examine how the experiences of different groups of people in the public safety system may differ when compared to whites. To continue the focus on reducing racial and ethnic disparities and guide discussions about system reform, Multnomah County's Local Public Safety System Council will work with system partners to create a quarterly Relative Rate Index Report on Multnomah County's public safety system and brief the Multnomah County Board of Commissioners biannually, starting in the fall of 2016.

4. Oregon Project Independence Waitlist Elimination (Smith)	Oregon Project Independence provides a variety of services to help Oregonians age 60 and older remain in their homes as long as they wish. Services include help with personal care, homemaker assistance, home delivered meals, and money management. Multnomah County currently has a waitlist for seniors eligible to participate in the program; a budget amendment proposed by Commissioner Smith dedicates $400,000 to provide services to all 140 people on the waitlist. This budget note directs that the waitlist be eliminated as soon as possible.
