Mildred Jeter and Richard Loving fell in love and married in 1958. Because Virginia's law made interracial marriage a felony offense, the Lovings were arrested. Their battle for the right to marry rose to the highest court nearly a decade after their marriage. On June 12, 1967, the Supreme Court overturned laws that banned racially mixed marriages in the case of Loving v. Virginia. Loving Day commemorates the anniversary of the landmark decision every June 12th.
