From Medical Homes to World-Class Care

Abstract

Panel B

This interactive session will draw from the collaborative experience of CareOregon, a Medicaid/Medicare health plan, and its contracted providers in building an integrated care system through the Triple Aim initiative. Participants will explore key elements of success in reintegrating care at multiple levels, from patient-driven complex care management, to the spread of a "robust" medical home model across primary care practices, to the creation of a "health commons" to promote integrated community services.

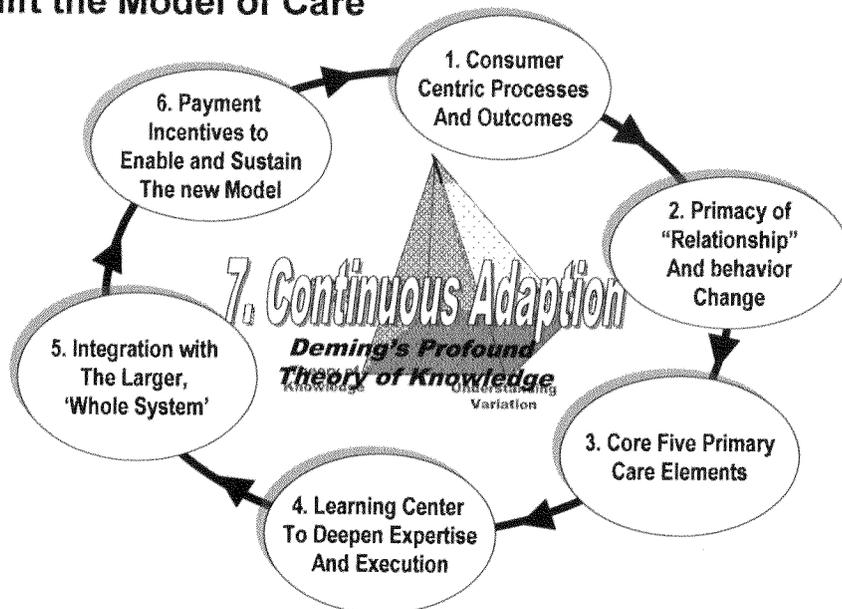

After this session you will be able to:

- Design population-oriented, patient-driven care management based on "mass customization"
- Create payer-provider collaboratives with aligned aims, supportive learning systems, and business models
- Engage multiple stakeholders around the common elements fundamental to creating a world-class health system

emerge. But in summer 2007, the clinic decided to implement an entirely new approach to caring for its many patients by joining Primary Care Renewal, a project funded and led by CareOregon, the Portland-based nonprofit medical plan administrator that serves Oregon Health Plan enrollees. (Mid-County was joined by four other health centers: Central City Concern's Old Town Clinic, which primarily serves Portland's homeless population; Virginia Garcia's Cornelius Center, which serves migrant and low-income families in Washington County; Oregon Health & Science University's Family Medicine Clinic at Richmond; and Legacy Emanuel's internal medicine clinic, both resident clinics).

Primary Care Renewal's goals are deceptively simple: the clinic want to prove that they can improve their patients' overall health as opposed to simply treating acute problems like the flu; make doctors and patients happier with their health care experience; and, perhaps most important, reduce costs to the health care system overall. "It makes sense that if you can keep people healthier, your costs will be under control, because..."
