LaDonna Redmond is a long-time community activist who has successfully worked to get Chicago Public Schools to evaluate junk food, launched urban agriculture projects, started a community grocery store and worked on federal farm policy to expand access to healthy food in low-income communities. Redmond is a frequently invited speaker and occasional radio host. In 2009, Redmond was one of 25 citizen and business leaders named a Responsibility Pioneer by Time Magazine. In 2007, she was awarded a Green For All Fellowship. LaDonna attended Antioch College in Yellow Springs,

SUMMIT BACKGROUND

At the first Multnomah Food Summit in 2010 we imagined what we could accomplish by working together. From that beginning, our community created a 15-year Food Action Plan with a shared vision and shared goals. At the 2011 Multnomah Food Summit, our community focused on turning shared goals into action. At the 2012 Multnomah Food Summit, we focused on Growing Food Justice by cultivating a shared and broad understanding of how we are all affected by a food system that contributes to crises such as chronic health conditions, food insecurity and hunger, climate change and environmental degradation, economic injustice, loss of farmland and undermining of the local economy.

The 2013 Food Justice Summit convenes our community to revisit where we've been, evaluate the new and changing landscape, and make adjustments to the course that we set in 2010. In this year's Summit we have 3 main goals: exploring "food justice", convening and networking, and driving action. We will open our Summit by laying a foundation of what food justice means to our community. Throughout the day we will be bringing together food justice leaders and advocates, food systems businesses and stakeholders to share information, deepen connections and define/refine what we mean by food justice. We will leave the Summit having celebrated past success and updating the Multnomah County Food Action Plan to address the changing landscape and emerging needs in our region.
