Regional COVID-19 Data Dashboard

Current Regional Disease Modeling

Figure 2: Scenarios projecting estimated epidemic trends with: a return to earlier measures (schools closed but businesses reopen), showing epidemic rebound; a continuation of current measures including the stay-at-home order, with active infections slowly decreasing; and a further reduction in transmission (e.g., improved testing and contact tracing), showing a rapid decrease in new infections.

Figure 3: Estimated demand on the health system. Expected demand for hospital beds is predicted to remain relatively constant before decreasing, assuming current or strengthened interventions and continued high compliance.
